

What Does Research Show? Do Pheromones Work?

Can the claims of hormone-enhanced perfumes and colognes be believed? Do pheromones work in making relationship easier and more successful? The jury is still out on this topic, as science technicians still examine a myriad of living organisms and people continue to have differing opinions.

Science does know that pheromones occur and that they do work in many social situations in all sorts of organisms, from bacteria in order to insects to sea creatures. Androgynous bacteria lay 'scent' trails that others of the species can follow, female butterflies could attract males from as much as six miles away, and sea urchins release detectable amounts of hormones into the surrounding waters during mating season. The species-specific secretions have been studied for the different signals they can deliver.

“ The question is whether or not these secretions can be isolated, mixed with carrier oils or other ingredients, and used topically to any real effect. It is now commercially practical to utilize this sort of hormone in pest control products, and there are lots of valuable, ecologically-friendly products generally use. This success which lends validity to be able to the use of attraction and repelling hormones would seem to indicate that the substances do work when separated from their original hosts.

After all, if sonar works for bats and dolphins and also for the world's naval forces, why would it not be true that sex hormones that attract mates in the bug world would signal similar actions at work on the human level? It is known that some individuals seem to have potent 'sex appeal' that physical appearance alone does not take into account. There are people who keep their attraction to a potential partner long after their first bloom of youth has faded.

Some Suspect that the Effects of this Type of Hormone is Short Lived

Too much so to be captured in a topical fragrance. However, it is true that people pest controls work well when suspended in balls and bags from trees, without repeated as well as regular applications. Testimonials, easy to find online, show that there are many people who feel that the products have enhanced their dating experiences and opened up avenues to meet new people who might never otherwise have been found.

- Go online and survey the many offerings, usually considered safe, ethical (all's fair in love and war?), and with anecdotal support.
- Select an application which appeals to you, and also try it out, so you may get your own answer to the actual question: Do pheromones work?
